“Ghosts of North Dakota” co-authors to speak at Touchmark Public invited to attend

BISMARCK, N.D. – Touchmark on West Century is inviting the public to attend a presentation and book signing on Thursday, Aug. 6. Terry Hinnenkamp and Troy Larson, co-authors/photographers of the “Ghosts of North Dakota” book series, will talk about the three-volume series and how they use photography to preserve old North Dakota towns that might otherwise disappear — and how they attain the pictures without harming the history.

Due to space limitations, they will give the presentation at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. at Touchmark, 1000 West Century Avenue.

“Ghosts of North Dakota” is a partnership between Larson and Hinnenkamp that seeks to document North Dakota’s pioneer towns. Their latest book, “Churches of the High Plains,” will also be available.

“These books play a vital role in keeping alive an important part of our state’s history,” says Amy Miller, Touchmark Life Enrichment Director. “We invite people of all ages — children and adults — to take advantage of this opportunity to learn more about our state’s history from two talented people who are preserving it.”

About Terry Hinnenkamp

Terry Hinnenkamp is a husband and dad, full-time radio personality in Fargo, photographer and antique-hound. He is also vice president of Sonic Tremor Media LLC. A native North Dakotan, he spent several years living and backpacking through Europe before returning to the state in 2003.

About Troy Larson

Troy Larson is a father, husband, writer, publisher and photographer. Originally from Minot, North Dakota, Larson traveled the country in the radio industry for over a decade before settling in Fargo in 2002. He is president of Sonic Tremor Media LLC, the company he founded with Hinnenkamp.
